THE COLORED STAMPEDE. The stampede among the dark skins of Chicago, which commenced immediately after the rendition of the Harris family of slaves, still continues. The blessings that this exodus of vice and depravity will confer upon the moral, physical and political health of Chicago are incalculable. It will rid us of the debris of the colored population, leaving a better name and a better opportunity for those of that color who remain, whose industry and economy have already commended them to the favorable consideration of our citizens. Our criminal courts will experience a very great abridgement of their dockets, and Abolition pettifoggers will have fewer occasions to exhibit their voluntary sympathy, and less opportunities to blow themselves into a notoriety which they can attain in no other way. We can get along with a much smaller police force than formerly, and clothes lines, hen roosts, wood yards and hundreds of similar scenes of former petty thieving, will be blessed with more ample security.—Chicago Times. [What baseness!]
