Life in Texas.

Mr. G. W. Kendall, editor of the N. O. Picayune, who has retired to a sheep farm, in Texas, thus writes to this paper:

"So far, although my place at the Post Oak Spring is within a few miles of where depredations have been committed, the Ind and have been kind enough not to molest me; yet all my good fortune I attribute to the fact that at that particular locality I keep neither horses nor cattle, and I do not believe that the red rascals care much about sheep. I hope they may never get up an appetite for mutton

"But if they have not meddled with my sheep they have pestered me in another way; they have kept up a stampede among the men in my employ, and ren dered some of them constantly uneasy.-One negro man in p rticular, who was at work cutting and splitting rails, was in such continual fear for several days that he declared he could not half work. To use his own words: 'Ebery lick I gib de tree wid de axe I hab to look round to see if some Injun don't gib me a lick in de back ob my head wid a to.nahawk.' A man with such a scare upon him is of little serv vice and your Bonw, was much be ente bearengel tion, soft in gran to tage end hand not blos any
